Paper Choices for the Home PrinterEnhance custom production with special paper choices. A greeting card will require a heavier paper weight than is typically used for basic computer printing needs, while a business card should be printed on card stock. Business card and label stock is available at your office supply store, as well as a variety of different weights and color paper for greeting card printing. Do prep design and practice on your printer/copier paper. Then insert the good stuff for the final run. Ink Options for the Home PrinterYou can go through a lot of ink when you begin doing custom card work on your home computer. There are several workarounds to help you manage this expense. When you print your proof copy, have your printer properties set to "Draft" and even print in simple black and white the first time. Of course, doing all the proofing on your computer screen will minimize any repetitive print needs. You may want to consider a printer upgrade. Take a look at the reservoir printer. These printers are a bit more expensive to purchase - closer to $200 than some of the inexpensive inkjet printers in sub $100 range - but the cost of ink is far less. This is because you fill the color reservoirs with bottles of ink - all four bottles available for the price of ONE replacement inkjet cartridge. And manufacturers report that they last for one to two years. But for the current needs of the inkjet user, give recycled "compatible" ink cartridges a try. These refurbished cartridges typically work just as well as the name brands. They are available at major office supply stores for 40-50% less than manufacturer ink cartridges.
